The exterior of the building the restaurant is located in has various signs and fun textures we decided to take a closer look at.

The outside walls are decorated with diverse stone plaques also known as a gevelsteen (gable stone) in Dutch or foundation plaque. These show what one could also call "milestones" in the buildings history, mainly marking the years when reconstruction or an expansion took place.

While having a lot of different textures I could use I wanted to kind of show off the exterior in general so I decided to focus on some of the colorful and fun stickers found almost everywhere around the city. I think they also tie nicely into the historical context mentioned on the previous page
